NINE LATINS GET AID IN JOURNALISM STUDY

The Inter American Press Association Scholarship Fund awarded journalism scholarships yesterday to nine Latin American newspapermen and students for a year of study at United States universities.

Since the program began in 1956, 101 grants totaling $230,000 have been awarded.

The nine winners are Nestor E. Alvarado of Tegucigalpa, Honduras, columnist for El Pueblo; Maria Rosa Atella of Montevideo, Uruguay, reporter of El Dia; Juan Capello Lorca and Hector Olave Vallejos of the University of Chile's School of Journalism; Vivien G. Carrington of Kingston, Jamaica, editorial writer for The Daily Cleaner; Alejandro Galvis Ramirez, assistant manager of Vanguardia Liberal of Bucaramanga, Columbia.

Also Gerardo Luzuriaga Arias, Quito, Ecuador, journalism student; Ubaldo L. Mazzalomo, Mendoza, Argentina, professor of journalism, and Gerard M. Samuel, reporter and assistant editor for The Trinidad Guardian.

The scholarships were contributed by the Robert R. McCormick Foundation of Chicago; El Mundo of San Juan, P. R.; Arthur Hays Sulzberger, Chairman of the board of The New York Times; James S. Copley, president of the Copley Press; Marshall Field Jr., publisher of The Chicago Sun-Times; James G. Stahlman, president and publisher of The Nashville Banner; the Reader's Digest Foundation, and Time, Inc. There were a number of small donations from association members.
